FRIDAY, NOVEMBER 12, 1909.

One of the more dangerous habits of the reckless autoist, is the turning of corners at considerable speed. To call his attention to the consequent danger to pedestrians may not avail to check the practice, but perhaps an appeal to his pocket may be more effective. An authority on automobile tires says:

The period at which the very greatest strain is put on any tire is when it is rounding a corner at high speed, which is an excellent way to cut the life of a tire in half. The prudent driver will always turn a corner cautiously and slowly.

With the price of raw rubber heavily increased during the year, and still advancing, and with it the cost of automobile tires, the reckless driver may conclude to lessen the up-keep of his machine by lessening his speed in turning corners.

Huntington has a tree warden who evidently believes that the office is not purely honorary, and that it has real duties to be performed by him. In this belief he differs from probably a majority of tree wardens and is, in our opinion, as right as they are wrong. Dr. H. A. Roberts, the tree warden referred to, is described as "an ardent forester." Upon taking office, he proceeded at once to secure a general map of the borough of Shelton and has located thereon every tree in the borough, with the name of its particular species, and such description as is needed. He will have a complete map made from these sectional ones. His maps show a total of 1,356 trees, divided as follows: Maples, 721; elms, 24; catalpas, 6; tulip, 2; cherry, 3; pine, 1; beech, 1; butternut, 2; ash, 37; oak, 40; birch, 20; chestnut, 16; spruce, 14; hickory, 13; cedar, 12; juniper, 10; poplar, 12; locust, 2. He has secured a tract of land, on which he will raise trees for use as they are needed, to replace dead ones, or to fill out spaces where trees are needed within the town and borough limits. The American Sentinel contains the following additional particulars:

This plan has the advantage of furnishing trees at a very slight expense to the town, and also to have the species best adapted to this section grown. While the list shows a decided preference for the maple and elm, yet these trees are both subject to insect pests and the new tree warden is of the opinion that the ideal tree for this section is after all the oak.

The listing and mapping will probably be continued throughout the town, and should this be done, Tree Warden Roberts will be enabled to furnish eventually to other towns a useful lesson of value. His recommendation of the oak tree in preference to the maple and the elm, is based upon the objection of the two latter to damaging and often destructive insect pests, and the immunity of the oak thus far from any such agencies of damage. It may be added that the oak is capable, by timely and proper trimming while young, of being made graceful in outline, and its foliage, while not so dense as that of the maple, can compete favorably with the elm in the attribute of shade.

A CRY FOR ILLUMINATION

Our esteemed contemporary, the Standard, referring to the harbor line and car barn surrender, on Tuesday said:

The power to undo both actions is available and if the public should be relieved, the opportunity is available.

The Farmer which favors undoing of both actions, if possible, is pleased to receive from such an infallible authority so unequivocal an opinion, particularly as quite a few men of some acquirements of legal lore, though perhaps possessing less real knowledge of the law than our esteemed contemporary, entertain the opposite view, possibly basing it upon the constitutional tradition of the irrefragability of contracts when properly executed and with due authority. Despite these opinions from the lesser lights of the law, and despite the constitutional provision above mentioned, the Farmer, moved in part by its wishes but in even larger part by admiration of and confidence in the superior legal acquirements of its esteemed contemporary, is strongly inclined to believe that the harbor line and car barn smudges upon the city's record may be wiped out as with a sponge, but it does, in deference to the lesser legal lights, favor awaiting an opinion from the city's authorized exponent of the law before proceeding, in accordance with our esteemed contemporary's interpretation of the law, to overturn the railroad-city contract and incidentally perhaps also the U. S. Constitution.

But it is possible that our esteemed contemporary has discovered a fatal flaw in the so-called contract, or a voiding defect in the manner of its execution, and bases its opinion thereupon; if so, the Farmer implores an early revelation thereof, in order that the clearly manifested wish of the people for an overturn of the alleged contract may be granted at the earliest possible moment. The matter is urgent and should receive prompt attention from our esteemed contemporary. Some eleven acres of harbor area, and the relief of congested sidewalks from grade crossings are involved.

Humbly the Farmer beseeches illumination from its esteemed contemporary, and gratefully will it be received and acknowledged.

ELKS DEDICATE TABLETS

IN MEMORY OF DEAD

Interesting and Impressive Exercises at Hartford Lodge, B. P. O. E.

The Hartford Lodge of Elks unveiled Tuesday evening, two memorial tablets in honor of the deceased members of the order, who number 122. The dedicatory exercises were impressive.

Trustee Patrick McGovern presented the tablets to the order, saying that they were erected in accordance with the law of the Grand Lodge of Elks, and upon the brilliant record of Hartford lodge, No. 19, which no one could question, and said that while at the national convention in Colorado, Trustee Samuel D. Chamberlain saw that which to him proved most appropriate for a memorial tablet, and he made a sketch of it, and to him much was due for his untiring efforts.

District Deputy Grand Exalted Ruler George L. Allen of Middletown, said: "We have met to-night for a purpose that has all the dignity and tenderness of funeral rites, yet not their sadness."

It is no new bereavement that calls us together, but such as have been softened by the hand of time. We do not meet to participate in solemnity around the newly opened grave, but the resting places of those we have met to honor have long been festooned by the hand of nature. Above them her daily sunshine has smiled and her tears have wept and as she has caused some vine to creep, some grass to grow, so we are about to dedicate to them a fitting memorial of our affection and of their worth.

STRATFORD

A large number of local residents contemplate going to New Haven to-morrow, for the purpose of witnessing the Yale-Princeton contest. Last Wednesday Allen Morehouse reached his 22nd birthday. Next Monday Donald Falken will celebrate his 22nd birthday.

Next Monday evening the Red Men expect to confer the Adoptive Degree upon a number of candidates.

All that is now wanted for the new fire alarm system, is the stringing of a wire from Mr. Judson's house to the belfry of the Congregational church.

Our local Christian Endeavor society will hold a meeting next Sunday. When a number of speakers will be present from out of town.

The Farmers' supper and dance last night at Red Men's hall proved to be a very pleasant and successful affair. The tables were beautifully loaded with the olden times food, and were liberally patronized. At the tables one noticed Mr. and Mrs. George T. Jewell, Mr. George Fryer, Mr. L. E. Peck, the Park brothers, Mr. Homan, Arthur Beardsley, Mr. George Payne, Lewis Spencer, Mrs. Chambers, Mrs. Julian Clinton, Mrs. Clifton, Miss Rhoda King and many others.
